Letters received from George M. Skelly, formerly chairman of the grisvance committee of the Central Vermont railroed contain a description of the trip across Costa Rica of Secretary Knox Mr. Skelly acted as conductor on the train bearing the secretary. He states that every pos-sible precaution making for the safe-ty of the diplomat was taken, both by ty of the diplomat was taken, both by the railroad and the government. A pilot train, carrying armed guards, preceded the secretary's special, which was followed by another train, also bearing armed guards. All culverts and bridges were guarded, and over thirty persons, suspected of having designs on Secretary Knox's life, were arrested. Practically every foot of the line from Port Limon to San Jose was guarded.

MILLINERY

Store this afternoon I stepped into the Millinery Department. There's an air of freshness and distinction about this pretty department which is at captivating, and the hate well, of the tables I saw the dearest e grey hat in two shades of hemp, brim which rolled on the sides and from was dark grey, obvered with a handsome band of aliver studged with pearls, and around the crown which was of a lighter shade was a strand of pearls. Rising from the front stood a lovely grey Paradise algretic caught with a rich effect oun-amont. This little hal had such a dainty air of distinction that it simply faculty and the stronger of the stronge fascinated me.

Another charming hat which I felt sure was imported was a large one which rolled softly up both front and two long estrich feathers in the most beautiful shades of that new prim-rose color, which shaded from the lightest pink to a soft dark red, and semed to curve in and out just to ollow the curves of the bat. Of ourse the hat was the same rich, fight shade as the feathers.

And then there were a host of others, cute little ones, dainly garden hats which looked like Summer Hself, prim tulbored ones and beautiful dressy hats. I wish I had the space to describe them, but you will have to see for yourself.
